BREED THEATRE.

Alice Joyce and Tom Moore in A Race with Time the Feature.

One of the prettiest pictures of the One of the prettiest pictures of the season is the one entitled A Race with Time, an output of the peerless Kalem company, featuring the two popular favorites, Alice Joyce and Tom Moore. It is purely a love story set in the unusual setting of railroad life. It is a struggle between two railroads for the government contract to carry the mails, and shows the dastardly means employed by one of the companies to thwart the rival line in companies to thwart the rival line in their effort to acquire the contract. A thrilling railroad race occurs during the plot's unfolding, and Miss loyee and Tom Moore are the easy favorites in the cast.

The Iron Heel, a powerful Essanay, with Francis X. Bushman, the famous leading man, tells a story that is unique to a degree, and displays Mr. Bushman in two widely different characters, one of the most exacting rerequirements of the piece.

The exact date for the local pictures has not been decided upon, but will be given due notice in the daily papers.

The Spring Maid Said to Be Better Than Ever.

Local opera lovers will have a gala musical event next Friday evening when Werbe & Luescher's joyous mu-sical success, The Spring Maid, comes to the Davis theatre.

The Spring Maid, with its sparkling comedy and alluring song hits enjoyed coast-to-coast triumph last season There is musical charm in every bub-bling note of its delightful score, and so much interest is taken in the coming visit that mail orders are already being received. The company is head-ed by the gifted prima donna, Gene Luneaka, of whom the Grand Rapids

Tt. may be as well to say that the entire company is even better than last season's organization. The Spring Maid is a delightful operetta, which must stand as the best of the Viennese trio, including The Merry Widow and The Chocolate Soldier. It is the most artistic and tuneful play that has been seen here. A final testimonial to the completeness and finish of the production is the spirited work of the special orchestra."

The management promises the same company and production seen last season, headed by Gene Luneska and J. H. Goldsworthy, and including the fameus Spring Maid chorus and ballet and the special orchestra including It may be as well to say that the Phantom Paintings are a mysterious feature that has been an unsolved rid-dle to Berlin, Paris, London and New York. The European importation constates of picture making copies in color of the famous paintings from the world's galleries, made without seeming help of any kind. Upon the stage are placed two blank canvasses such as artists use. The canvas is subject to the closest scruting from the convenience of the conven to the closest scrutiny from the au-dience to whom it is passed by the inventor who introduces the act. Then someone from the audience chooses some world-famous painting and, without putting his hand to the can-vas there appears a copy of the pic-ture chosen, no explanation being given as to how these pictures are produced. The inventor invites the closest inspection, especially from artists, and he asserts that there is no ex-change of canvas, no slight of hand, nor, the pictures mere daubs. They nor, the pictures mere daubs. They are beautiful pictures usually sold af-ter the performance. This act has just played Keith's theatre, Boston.

Defective Spring Frog. Hartford, Conn., Dec. 17.—Engineer C. C. Elwell of the public utilities com-mission today reported to the commis-sion that the derallment of the Port-land express near Milford on Nov. 16 last was due to a defective spring frog. He found, upon careful examination, that a boit and a nut at the base of the wing rail were missing and that the base plate was broken. The missing parts were not visible except upon a close examination.

The petition of the Norwich, Colchester and Hartford Traction Compuny respectfully represents that it is a body politic and corporate incorporated by Act of the General Assembly at its January Session, 1907, and that since its incorporation it has expended large sums of money in the construction of said railway, but owing to the difficulties and expense of such construction more time and capital is required for its construction; and further that an important and valuable service could be rendered the public by said corporation if the right were given it to sell electricity for lighting or power, or both, within the towns of Glastonbury and Mariborough; said Company therefore prays that its charter may be amended in the following effect:

First—That the time within which said Company may construct its railway and exercise its franchises be extended to Dec. 1, 1917, or such other time as the General Assembly may prescribe.

Second—That the authorized capital stock of said corporation be increased to Two Millions of Dollars.

Third—That said corporation shall have the right to sell electricity for lighting or power, or both, within the towns of Glastonbury and Marlborough.

POETRY

WEAVER OF SHROUDS.

She sits among the tangled briars and bracken—
Wet with the fog yet golden with the sunshins—
Weaving a shroud of red and brown and yellow,
Filmy and wondrous,

Sometimes a rain of leaves comes flut-tering downwards.
Kissing her haid, her lips, her busied fingers;
Sometimes the river takes them, and they shiver Meshed in the rushes.

All the long day she dallies with her Choosing her colors, changeful and contrasted;
Through the dim lanes there comes a sound of singing,
Wistful and dreamlike.

Hath she no thought of question and foreboding—
Nothing of fear when chilling rainfall drenches
When the swift winds come ruthless

All she hath woven? All she hath schemed of beauty for her burial— Berries and traveler's joy and purple Gold of the gorses, scarlet of the brambles— Tossed to the spoilers!
Arthur L. Salman, in the Pall Mail

IN PRAISE OF SNOW.

The times have changed, no doubt of that,
Since days of long ago;
There was a time, I recollect,
When people welcomed snow.
But now it is so different,
Wherever you may go,
When skies are overcast you'll hear!
"Gee whiz, I hope 'twon't snow!"

The big policeman on the beat,
The letter carrier, too;
The butcher man, the grocer man,
All make a big "to do."
The auto fiend has joined the ranks
And sounds his note of wee;
"We do not mind the rain." they say,
"If only it won't snow."

Humanity on every hand
Reviles the mantic white;
No one appears to revel in
The fair and wondrous sight.
But hold! There are a few who sing
Its praises soft and low;
The poet cops a check or two
From poems writ on snow.

Do not allow the red spider to in-fest the house plants. This is a tiny insect that works on the underside of the foliage. Syringe the plants fre-quently and overcome the dryness of the atmosphere and this insect will not bother. The reason much of your celery grew long stems and the stalks were pithy was due to the variety and the seed. Many varieties of green celery grow pithy from the best of seed, but when the seed is of an inferior quality the majority of the plants are apt to be worthless owing to the hollow stalks,

Do not feed wheat screenings to your poultry. It is almost a worthless food. While there is a great difference in wheat screenings, still the best grades have but small feed! value. Only a small portion of the screenings is sound, wholesome grain, and the fowls must eat great quantities of it to secure a proper quantity of nutritious food.

Hang a three-compartment feed Hang a three-compartment feed hopper in each poultry pen. Fill one compartment with oyster shells, another with grit and the third with granulated charcoal. When only a few hens are kept another similar hopper filled with beef scraps, mixed ground foods and mixed whole grains should be kept in the henhouse.

Co-operation with your neighbors in purchasing feeds, fertilizers, seeds, household nocessities and other farmneeds is an excellent means of securing low prices on everything that must be purchased. Many are skeptical about co-operating in this way, but it is the only means of getting quality goods at moderate prices.
